An Illinois man accused of stealing 21 tons of Wisconsin cheese was arrested Tuesday in New Jersey. Authorities said the 34-year-old man used false paperwork to obtain the $200,000 worth of Muenster cheese from K&K Cheese in Cashton, Wis. The company can't resell the cheese because they can't guarantee it wasn't tampered with, so it will be donated to charity. (AP)

Lanza Home Loaded With Guns

Warrants detail Newtown shooter's cache of weapons

Newtown, Conn.

When Adam Lanza walked out of his house for the last time, he left behind firearms and knives and more than 1,600 rounds of ammunition — taking only four guns. They would suffice.

He loaded the weapons into his car, drove to Sandy Hook Elementary School, blasted his way into the building and within five minutes fired off 154 shots with a Bushmaster .223-caliber rifle.

Having fatally shot 20 first-graders and six educators, he killed himself with a final, single shot from a Glock handgun. He still had more than 100 rifle bullets at hand.

Warrants released Thursday provide the most insight to date into the world of the 20-year-old gunman, a recluse who played violent

Obama on Gun Control: 'Don't Get Squishy'

The Newtown, Conn., shooting elevated gun safety to the top of President Barack Obama's agenda; at an event in Washington on Thursday, joined by the families of four children killed at Sandy Hook, he urged lawmakers not to "get squishy" in the face of opposition to gun control. "Shame on us if we've forgotten," Obama said. "I haven't forgotten those kids." Obama's event came as gun-control legislation faces an uncertain future, even though more than 80 percent of people say in polling they support expanded background checks. (AP) video games in a house packed with weaponry that was all too real. The inventory of items taken from the spacious, colonial-style home included books on autism, a vast array of weapon paraphernalia, and images of what appears to be a dead person covered with plastic and blood.

A gun locker in Lanza's bedroom contained a metal bayonet, three samurai swords, a .323-caliber bolt-action rifle, a .22-caliber Savage Mark II rifle and a .22-caliber Volcanic starter pistol. There was literature that included a news article on a 2008 shooting at Northern Illinois University and a National Rifle Association guide to pistol shooting.

In a duffel bag, investigators found ear and eye protection, binoculars, paper targets and an NRA certificate that belonged to Adam Lanza. The NRA said Lanza was not a member.

All of the weapons used in the shooting apparently had been purchased by Lanza's mother, Nancy, with whom he lived, prosecutor Stephen J. Sedensky III said in a statement accompanying the warrants.

She was found dead in her bed; Adam Lanza had shot her the morning of the massacre, Dec. 14. Authorities also found a holiday card from Nancy Lanza containing a check made out to her son for the purchase of another firearm.

Connecticut Gov. Dannel P. Malloy expressed incredulity over the access that the troubled young man had to a cache of weapons.

"How anyone would have maintained that household that way is difficult to understand," he said.

CDC hopes graphic anti-smoking ads will help people quit

New York

Government health officials on Thursday launched the second round of a graphic ad campaign that is designed to get smokers off tobacco, saying they believe the last effort persuaded tens of thousands to quit.

The ads feature sad, real-life stories: There is Terrie, a North Carolina woman who lost her voice box. Bill, a diabetic smoker from Michigan who lost his leg. And Aden, a 7-year-old boy from New York who has asthma attacks from second-hand smoke.

"Most smokers want to quit. These ads encourage them to try," said Dr. Tom Frieden, director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

The CDC campaign cost $48 million and includes TV, radio and online spots as well as print ads and billboards.

Repeat Performance

Like last year, the current 16-week anti-smoking campaign spotlights real people who were hurt and/or disfigured by smoking. Terrie Hall, a 52-year-old throat cancer survivor who had her voice box removed about a dozen years ago, makes a repeat performance. In a new ad, Hall speaks with the buzzing sound of her electrolarynx and advises smokers to make a video of themselves now. "I wish I had," she says. "The only voice my grandson's ever heard is this one." (AP)

The spending comes as the agency is facing a tough budget squeeze, but officials say the ads should more than pay for themselves by averting future medical costs to society. Smoking is the leading cause of preventable illness and death in the United States.

Last year's similar $54 million campaign was the agency's first and largest national advertising effort. The government deemed it a success: That campaign triggered an increase of 200,000 calls to quit lines.

After decades of decline, the adult smoking rate has stalled at roughly 20 percent in recent years. Advocates say the campaign provides a necessary jolt to a weary public that has been listening to government warnings about the dangers of smoking for nearly 50 years.

"There is an urgent need to continue this campaign," said Matthew Myers, president of the Campaign for Tobacco-Free Kids, in a statement. MIKE STOBBE (AP) and made her a trailblazer in news and daytime TV.

Someone who works closely with Walters said the plan is for her to retire in May 2014 after a series of special programs saluting her career. The person spoke on condition of anonymity Thursday.

Walters, 83, was hospitalized earlier this year after taking a fall in Washington and for a case of the chickenpox.

Her television career began in 1961 when she was hired as a writer for the "Today" show. She graduated quickly to on-air work and became the show's co-host before leaving in 1976 to become co-anchor of ABC's evening news — the first woman in such a role for a television network.

Now, largely retired from ABC News already, her main work is at "The View," the daytime hit she created in 1997. (AP)

U.S. Flexes Air Power in S. Korea

2 bombers join drills in a move likely to infuriate the North

Seoul, S. Korea

In a show of force following weeks of North Korean bluster, the U.S. on Thursday took the unprecedented step of announcing that two of its nuclear-capable B-2 bombers joined joint military drills with South Korea, dropping dummy munitions on an island range.

The announcement is likely to further enrage Pyongyang, which has issued a flood of ominous statements to highlight displeasure over the drills and U.N. sanctions over its nuclear test last month. But there were signs Thursday that it is willing to go only so far.

A North Korean industrial plant operated with South Korean know-how was running normally, despite the North's shutdown a day earlier of communication lines used to move workers and goods across the border to the Kaesong complex.

U.S. Forces Korea said in a statement that the B-2 stealth bombers flew from a U.S. air base in Missouri and dropped dummy munitions on the South Korean island range before returning home. It was unclear whether America's stealth bombers were used in past annual drills with South Korea, but this is the first time the military has announced their use.

— SUNG HYUN-SANG OF MANSUN CORP., WHOSE COMPANY EMPLOYS NORTH KOREANS, ON THE IMPACT OF THE ANNUAL U.S.-SOUTH KOREAN MILITARY DRILLS ON RELATIONS WITH NORTH KOREA

The statement follows an earlier U.S. announcement that nuclear-capable B-52 bombers participated in the joint military drills.

The announcement will likely draw a strong response from Pyongyang. North Korea sees the military drills as part of a U.S. plot to invade and becomes particularly upset about U.S. nuclear activities in the region. Washington and Seoul say the drills are routine.

North Korea has already threatened nuclear strikes on Washington and Seoul in recent weeks. It said Wednesday there was no need for communication in a situation "where a war may break out at any moment." Earlier this month, it said that it considers void the armistice that ended the Korean War in 1953.

Analysts see a full-blown North Korean attack as unlikely, though there are fears of a more localized conflict. HYUNG-JIN KIM AND SAN KIM (AP)

Moving Targets

You have to worry about getting hit if you're playing dodgeball. You shouldn't have to if you're taking a walk and obeying traffic laws. At least, that was my theory before I started reading stories nearly every day about pedestrians getting knocked over.

On Tuesday morning, a woman was smacked by a car in a residential Bethesda neighborhood. Later that day, a driver struck three people near a bus stop in Northwest. On Wednesday, it was three people at a bus stop in Northeast. And a week ago, it was 71-year-old Ruby Whitfield, who was in a marked crosswalk by New Samaritan Baptist Church on Florida Avenue when she was fatally hit by a drunken driver.

At a vigil held at the church Tuesday night to honor Whitfield, Mayor Vincent Gray promised to install a traffic signal in front of the church. And while that's a nice gesture — and a helpful one for other folks in the neighborhood — it doesn't address the larger pedestrian problem we seem to have here.

The Twitterverse responded to the spike in incidents with “#pedestriansafetytips” — tongue-in-cheek suggestions of how we should conduct ourselves when on two feet.

“Make eye contact w drivers b4 entering the street — they might lipread your last words & pass them on to your family,” suggested @mcmoots. “Before crossing, look right, then left, then right again. Then left again, then right, then, screw it, go back home,” offered @schonbergerben.

Several of my favorites (including “Walking across the street is good exercise. But running out of the way is EVEN BETTER Win/win!”) came from @bikepedantic, otherwise known as 37-year-old transportation planner Darren Buck. The Arlington resident hopes the gallows humor highlights a serious problem: “We accept so many of these incidents as accidents. People getting hit by cars isn't a natural thing. It's preventable.”

The District Department of Transportation has been addressing the problem by putting in traffic signals with leading pedestrian intervals (that's when the walk sign flips on a few seconds before a green light to give pedestrians a head start into an intersection). D.C. Council member Mary Cheh noted the improvement at the start of a hearing Monday dealing with pedestrian and bicycle safety.

Advisory Neighborhood Commissioner Noah Smith was there to testify about his pet peeve: construction projects that block sidewalks and bike lanes. Smith's district includes the intersection of 14th and U streets NW, one of the city's most accident-prone. It doesn't help that developers are working on both sides of 14th Street, and while the project on the east side provides a protected walkway, the west side's doesn't. His constituents demand sidewalks.

Giving pedestrians a fair share of the road is a no-brainer. Forcing drivers to pay attention to foot traffic should be, too.

Although I don't dispute the wisdom of @twjpd23 — “One great way to make sure you're visible is to set yourself on fire before crossing the street” — there has to be an easier way to get noticed.

Meridian Pint's Sam Fitz talks shop at BrewExpo America during the Craft Brewers Conference at the Washington Convention Center.

Welcome to A Beer Town

This week's Craft Brewers Conference puts D.C. suds in the national spotlight

Washington

After this week, D.C.'s reputation will never be the same. When the 2013 Craft Brewers Conference comes to an end today, nobody will blink if you call us a beer town.

In just a few years, the nation's capital has gone from having no breweries and a humble scene to having one of the most distinctive beer cultures in the country.

After the Heurig Brewery closed in 1956, making way for the Kennedy Center, there hadn't been a brewery in the district until 2011, when DC Brau opened its doors at 3178 Bladensburg Road NE. Now there are three within the city's limits, and two more are in the works. Since 2008, at least 11 have opened if you include certain suburbs.

The Brewers Association's annual gathering is the Super Bowl of craft beer — a product that comes from traditional, independent breweries of a certain size. The event brings together brewers, distributors, retailers, enthusiasts and professionals of all sorts. But it isn't held just anywhere.

"I've always seen CBC go down somewhere else, or read about it," said Drew Swift, the general manager at Meridian Pint in Columbia Heights. "For us to be chosen means that people are finally recognizing the scene and giving it some respect."

That respect is not easy to come by, especially from veteran West Coasters. "Coming from Seattle, you get quite a few eclectic styles," said beer enthusiast Dalona Foster while visiting the soon-to-open Bluejacket brewery near Nationals Park. But "each brewery [here] has their own unique twist to offer ... I'm pretty impressed."

Many see the recent growth as just the beginning.

"It's no accident that we chose D.C. to start our brewery up," said Will Durgin, who formerly worked for Oregon's Pyramid Brewery and is now the head brewer at Atlas Brew Works, which aims to open this year at 2052 West Virginia Ave. NE. "The potential here is absolutely gigantic."

Though Baltimore and Philadelphia have traditionally been considered the front-runners as beer cities in the mid-Atlantic, the Washington area has arrived to the scene.

"It used to be that we were very much a little brother to Philly," said Sam Fitz, the beer director at Meridian Pint. There is an argument that we've surpassed them as "one of, if not [the], premier East Coast beer scenes," he said. "I can't think of a bar that's opened in the past two years that hasn't opened with craft beer."

But what makes a good beer town? It's not just the beer. Or the breweries. What makes D.C. unique is the melange of tastes and the transcendent interest in craft beer.

"What I'm consistently impressed by is how it's not just the beer geeks that are into the beer anymore," said Greg Engert, beer director for the Neighborhood Restaurant Group. "It's everybody."

"It's an opportunity for us to showcase what we're doing and how we're establishing our own community and our own culture."

— DAVE COLEMAN, CO-FOUNDER OF 3 STARS BREWING COMPANY IN NORTHWEST

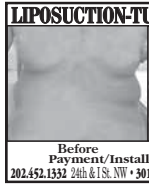

D.C. resident Irina King happily enjoyed a New Belgium Rampant Imperial IPA at Smith Commons on Tuesday during its Masters of the Craft Beer Universe event series. "It's amazing," she said. "In New York, in Charleston, in the South, it's nothing like here. People love beer here. And they appreciate the fact that it's from D.C., it's homegrown. It's not a fad."

Dan Kopman, co-founder of Schlafly Beer and a lobbyist for the Brewers Association, summed up why D.C. is a unique beer experience: There is an international community that demands imports and there are people from around the country who are interested in their hometown or regional beers. "You overlay that with new breweries starting up here in the District and it just creates this synergy of international, national, [and] local," Kopman said on the floor of the trade show Wednesday. "You won't get that in other cities." CLINTON YATES (EXPRESS)

Mr. Beer Goes to Washington

Besides the size of the venue, the decision to bring this year's Craft Brewers Conference to D.C. was also policy-related. On Tuesday, more than 200 brewery owners, CEOs and employees lobbied on Capitol Hill to gain support for new federal excise tax legislation. "The decision to come here first started getting momentum in 2009," said Bob Pease, chief operating officer of the Brewers Association. "The vision at that time was that we would come here and we would have hundreds of our members engage in some type of advocacy effort [and] that Washington would blossom into a great craft beer community ... Much of that has come to fruition." C.Y.

Gray Releases Budget

Mayor calls for new spending initiatives, no new taxes or fees

Washington

D.C. Mayor Vincent Gray is proposing a $10.1 billion budget that includes new spending on affordable housing, libraries and police and fire department vehicles.

The district ended the past fiscal year with a more than $400 million surplus. While most went into the city's reserve fund, Gray is proposing new spending because the city's income, corporate and sales taxes are expected to keep growing.

The budget includes no new taxes or fees. It also includes no tax reductions beyond eliminating an unpopular tax on municipal bonds from other states.

Major new initiatives include $100 million in new spending on affordable housing and a $103 million renovation of the city's central library.

Gray also is proposing $8 million for new fire department vehicles and $7.2 million for police vehicles. (AP)

Debate Over Arlington Streetcar Gets Heated

Washington

The fate of the Columbia Pike streetcar project may be in the hands this spring of federal transit authorities who are deciding whether to fund it, but for the 350-plus Arlingtonians who turned out to a sometimes raucous forum Wednesday night, the issue was all about local choices.

The $250 million streetcar system, from Baileys Crossroads to Pentagon City, has been in planning stages for 15 years. But as the county awaits word on federal funding, opposition to the line has grown and organized, based on the argument that a modern bus rapid transit system would do nearly the same job and would be as much as $200 million cheaper.

Pro- and anti-streetcar factions had it out in Kenmore Middle School as a moderator struggled to keep the rowdy crowd in control.

The county staff and four of the five elected board members said a streetcar line is needed because it can carry about twice as many passengers as a bus can and an estimated 14,000 new apartments and condos will be built in the area in the next decade or two.

But many current Columbia Pike residents, who pay some of the most affordable rents in the county, worry that they will be driven from their homes. PATRICIA SULLIVAN (THE WASHINGTON POST)

D.C. Fire Chief Apologizes for Response Times

Washington

The District of Columbia's fire chief has apologized for recent failures that led to slow ambulance response times, but two D.C. Council members say they remain concerned about the chief's management of the department given its staff and equipment shortages.

Chief Kenneth Ellerbe told a D.C. Council committee Thursday that the department's fleet "maintains an acceptable level of readiness."

Earlier this month, a D.C. police officer injured in a hit-and-run had to wait 15 minutes for an ambulance from Maryland. (AP)

READY TO REIGN

When the Nationals shut down Stephen Strasburg last September, it was with the young pitcher's long-term health in mind. Entering the 2013 season, the 24-year-old no longer has that highly disputed innings limit, and Strasburg is expected to be the ace on one of the top rotations in all of baseball.

The Nationals' decision to sit Strasburg drew plenty of criticism, considering the right-hander was healthy and performing at an elite level when Washington took him out of the rotation. He was 15-6 with a 3.16 ERA in his first full season back since undergoing Tommy John surgery.

But now Strasburg appears poised for the long haul, evidenced by the amount of pitches he's thrown this spring. In a March 16 exhibition against Houston, he threw 93 pitches in a 4-2 loss. In his major league career, Strasburg has surpassed the 93-pitch mark in only 24 starts. The reins on the Nats' opening day starter seem to have loosened.

"It's starting to click a little bit," Strasburg told The Washington Post. "The biggest thing is not really stressing about how the ball feels at the end. You're still kind of building. I know that the more times I get out there and get my pitch count up, I'm going to feel just exactly the same as I came into the game."

While Strasburg garners most of the attention, he's part of one of the deepest pitching staffs in the league.

Gio Gonzalez, Jordan Zimmermann, Ross Detwiler and Dan Haren round out a young and talented rotation that could accomplish a lot in

NEW NATS

Dan Haren, P
Starter won 28 games in the past two years with the Angels.

Rafael Soriano, P
Signed a two-year deal after saving 43 games for the Yankees in 2012.

Denard Span, CF
New lead-off hitter was acquired in a trade with the Twins.

2013. A season ago, Gonzalez, Zimmermann and Detwiler combined for an ERA of 3.06 and 465 strikeouts. Haren signed a one-year deal with the Nationals this offseason and hopes to bounce back from a down 2012 season (12-13, 4.33 ERA) with the Angels.

Many national pundits are buying into the hype surrounding this year's Washington team, mostly because of what's expected out of its pitchers. Both Sports Illustrated and ESPN The Magazine picked the Nationals to win the World Series.

On top of team honors, both Strasburg and 20-year-old Bryce Harper are predicted to win Cy Young and NL MVP, respectively, in preseason predictions by Sports Illustrated reporters.

Harper, who won NL rookie of the year as a teenager last season, raised his batting average to .484 this spring after he reached base for an 11th-straight at-bat Wednesday.

Expectations will be at an all-time high for the first time since the Nationals moved to Washington in 2005. If pitching is indeed what wins championships, then a World Series title is certainly not out of the question. JASON BUTT (FOR EXPRESS)

Washington Nationals

After having the best record in baseball last year, the Nats' lineup, rotation and bullpen all got better ... at least on paper.

Atlanta Braves

The addition of the Upton brothers makes Atlanta's outfield one of the best in baseball, offensively and defensively.

Philadelphia Phillies

Philadelphia still has a chance to have one of the top rotations if Cole Hamels, Cliff Lee and Roy Halladay can all stay healthy this year.

New York Mets

The only way New York sniffs .500 is if it has award-winning seasons from David Wright (possible) and Jon Niese (much less possible).

Florida Marlins

When they had talent for at least part of the season, the Marlins lost 93 games in 2012. Without talent, this could get ugly.

JEFFREY TOMIK (EXPRESS)

THE FAVORITES*

 As long as everything goes as planned. On paper, the Nationals improved in every way this offseason. But exceeding low expectations is much easier than being the team to beat. A lot needs to go right for a team to make the playoffs. In 2012, Adam LaRoche had the best season in his nine-year career, the top of the rotation never missed a start until Stephen Strasburg was shut down, and the bullpen pitched better than anyone expected. Can the Nats repeat all of that success? Washington wasn't the only NL East team to make changes: The Braves and the Phillies are poised to unseat the reigning NL East champs. JEFFREY TOMIK (EXPRESS)

WILSONRAMOS

Best case: He stays healthy and gets his power back. In 2011, he had 15 home runs and 52 RBIs.

Worst case: He struggles in his first season back from a torn ACL in his right knee.

FIRST BASE

ADAMLAROCHE

Best case: A repeat of 2012, when he had a career-high 33 homers and 100 RBIs and hit .271.

Worst case: A repeat of 2011, when he hit .172 with three homers and played in just 43 games.

SECOND BASE

DANNYESPINOSA

Best case: He keeps improving his power numbers after hitting 17 home runs in 2012.

Worst case: His strikeouts, an NL-most 189 last year, make him a liability in the lineup.

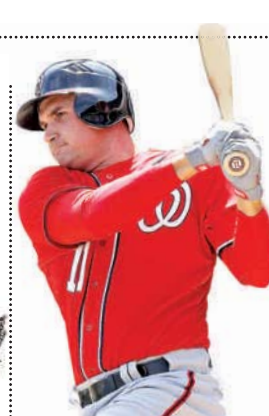

SHORTSTOP

Best case: He wins his second-straight Silver Slugger award and keeps improving defensively.

Worst case: His inability to draw walks and get on base affects his power at the plate.

THIRD BASE

RYANZIMMERMAN

Best case: He plays in more than 145 games for the second time since 2007 and is an MVP candidate.

Worst case: His shoulder injury becomes a problem again, and his defense and power at the plate suffer.

The Washington Post will be collecting the favorite baseball stories from Nationals players, coaches and fans all season. Share your own memory or read others' at washingtonpost.com/grid/nationals/baseball-memories or post one on Twitter using the hashtag #BaseballMemories.

"In the backyard with my mom or my dad — either of them could pitch — and I had one of those big, red whiffle ball bats, and they would throw for hours and hours and hours. I wouldn't let them go in until I hit for hours."

— THIRD BASEMAN RYAN ZIMMERMAN

nats2013

NO. 1 STARTER

STEPHEN STRASBURG

Best case: He wins the Cy Young. In 45 career starts, Strasburg is 21-10 with a 2.94 ERA.

Worst case: He fizzles down the stretch. Last year he had a 4.14 ERA in his final 10 starts.

NO. 2 STARTER

GIO GONZALEZ

Best case: Once again he's a Cy Young candidate, winning 20 games with a sub-3.00 ERA.

Worst case: He has control issues and leads the majors in walks for the second time in three years.

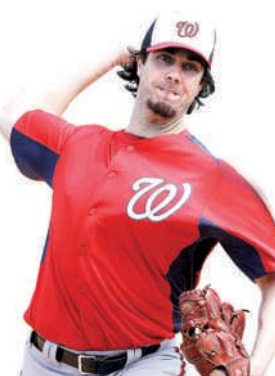

NO. 3 STARTER

JORDAN ZIMMERMANN

Best case: He pitches like he did during the first four months of the 2012 season (2.28 ERA).

Worst case: He pitches like he did during the last two months of the 2012 season (4.40 ERA).

NO. 4 STARTER

DAN HAREN

Best case: He reverts to his 2011 form, when he finished seventh in the AL Cy Young voting.

Worst case: The 32-year-old's 6.39 ERA this spring is an indication of what's to come.

NO. 5 STARTER

ROSS DETWILER

Best case: In his first full season as a starter, he's able to withstand the long year.

Worst case: Left-handers, who smashed 12 homers off him last season, continue to slug the lefty.

LEFT FIELD

BRYCE HARPER

Best case: His hot spring (.476 in 63 at-bats) carries over to the regular season.

Worst case: His sore left thumb is a more-serious injury, and pitchers are able to adjust to Harper in his second season.

CENTER FIELD

Best case: He's the ideal leadoff hitter and center fielder the Nats have been looking for.

Worst case: He's not an impact on the base paths (17 steals in 2012) and doesn't walk.

RIGHT FIELD

JAYSON WERTH

Best case: The veteran remains the Nats' leader and is able to fill in nicely in the No. 2 hole.

Worst case: His power numbers never return after hitting just five homers in 81 games in 2012.

SETUP MAN

DREW STOREN

Best case: He becomes the dominant back-end reliever he was in 2011 (43 saves).

Worst case: He never recovers from his Game 5 collapse (four runs allowed in the ninth).

CLOSER

RAFAEL SORIANO

Best case: The Nats' top free agent pickup makes the bullpen better with his veteran experience.

Worst case: He declines, and the Nats must fall back on Tyler Clippard and Drew Storen.

Trade deadline looms as Washington tries to make playoff push

Capitals

The looming NHL trade deadline is less than a week away, and how the Capitals are approaching it depends on who you ask.

Forward Brooks Laich, for example, said Thursday that the deadline hasn't been mentioned in the locker room. On the other hand, next Wednesday's 3 p.m. deadline has crossed forward Troy Brouwer's mind.

"You always think about it," he said. "You see the moves around the league, you look at your team and you kind of play GM a little bit."

The Capitals find themselves in an interesting position. Only four points out of the Eastern Conference's eighth and final playoff spot entering play Thursday, they could feasibly elect to bring in players to make a push toward the post-season or sell off assets and look toward the future. The result of Washington's upcoming three-game road trip, which begins Sat-

Meanwhile...

Jarome Iginla was given freedom by the Calgary Flames to explore a trade and decided to go to Pittsburgh.

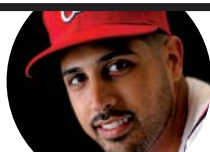

Iginla called the opportunity to chase a Stanley Cup with Sidney Crosby, who he called "the best in the world," as the biggest reason to join the Penguins, who have ripped off 13 straight games heading into Thursday night's matchup with Winnipeg. The move makes the Penguins the prohibitive Cup favorite. (AP) urday in Buffalo, will likely play a role in how things proceed.

Forward Mike Ribeiro's name has been frequently tossed around as a potential deadline target. The 33-year-old is Washington's leading scorer and an unrestricted free agent at the end of the season. He's looking for a long-term deal of at least four to five years. French-Canadian news outlet RDS reported Wednesday that Ribeiro rejected a three-year deal worth $14 million from the Capitals.

"If it's gonna happen, it's gonna happen," Ribeiro said Thursday. "So we'll see what this week brings us and then we'll go from there."

ADAM VINGAN (FOR EXPRESS)

Strong Ending: Gio Gonzalez allowed one hit and struck out seven over four innings as the Washington Nationals closed out their spring training in Florida with a 5-1 victory over the New York Mets. Adam LaRoche and Danny Espinosa each hit a solo home run in the second inning for Washington. Gonzalez, who went 21-8 last season, showed he is ready for the regular season, allowing only a first-inning single by New York's Daniel Murphy. (AP)

Slew of sites make it easier to rent your home to travelers

Would you ever post an ad on the Internet inviting strangers to pay you to use rooms in your home — like a hotel?

That's exactly what Donna Reynolds did in late 2009 after retiring from 33 years as a phone company cable splicer. She read a newspaper story about websites where people rent out part or all of their home to travelers. She thought it sounded like something fun to try.

In today's hyper-connected culture — where virtual and real worlds collide — sites such as Airbnb.com, Wimdu.com and Roomorama.com are allowing people across the globe to open up their homes to visitors.

Reynolds, 59, was looking for a new adventure. She had three extra rooms in her house in Hyattsville, Md., so she posted a listing on Airbnb: up to three rooms available for only $60 per night. "I'm not doing this so much for the money — although that's a big help," she says. "So I keep it really cheap."

Within a month, she got a few nibbles, and by the following spring, travelers from as far away as China and Africa were coming to stay with Reynolds.

The house can accommodate as many as 15 people, so a lot of her guests are families. Many are home-schooling their children and visit D.C. for its educational value.

"I'm having the time of my life," Reynolds says. "The stories you hear from people? It's just been incredible."

You don't have to own your place to participate in the short-term renting craze. Even renters can share their empty beds and couches with others.

To make some extra money during the inauguration in January, Jay Vilar, 34, tried Airbnb for the first time. He and his boyfriend rented their leased Columbia Heights three-story rowhouse to a group of five.

"We could not have asked for better renters," Vilar says. "They were 100 percent respectful of the house."

In addition to cleaning up after themselves (including washing and folding their sheets), the renters left a list of things they used in the kitchen such as milk and butter. "They even said, 'We took four shots of your whiskey,'" Vilar says.

Because all potential guests might not be quite so perfect, the short-term rental websites offer screening systems to help hosts evaluate guests (and vice versa).

On each website, individuals create profile pages where they can provide photos and a bit of personal information. Guests and hosts can then post reviews of each other, which other members can view to help determine if they might be a good match.

"I will easily feel comfortable with [potential guests] if they've stayed with other people on Airbnb and they have reviews," says Melissa Torres, who has used Airbnb as both a host and a guest for more than four years.

Torres rents out her entire Logan Circle loft when she travels or just her sofa bed when she's home in D.C. She chats with potential guests via email and does a little Google research before accepting any reservations.

When it's the sofa bed up for grabs, Torres says she's more comfortable renting to women. "There's the issue of toilet etiquette, and just bathroom and general privacy," she says.

"I'm having the time of my life. The stories you hear from people? It's just been incredible."

— DONNA REYNOLDS, WHO USES THE ONLINE SERVICE AIRBNB.COM TO RENT HER EXTRA ROOMS TO TRAVELERS

Torres lists on Airbnb as well as Roomorama.com, a European site. "I like a European tourist, more so sometimes than an American tourist," she says. While home sharing is relatively new in the U.S., it's been a popular way for Europeans and Australians to travel for a long time. "I think little by little, Airbnb has kind of opened that door to Americans," Torres says.

For additional peace of mind, some websites offer insurance against damage to your home. But host beware: Be sure to read the fine print to make sure you know what is covered and whether your location is even eligible.

Airbnb provides what they call a "Host Guarantee." They will reimburse hosts up to $1 million for property damage or theft, with the exception of things such as cash, jewelry, rare artwork and pets.

Donna Reynolds rents multiple rooms of her home to visitors — often families.

"It's a good idea to put in a safe or firebox for all your small valuables and important documents," says Emily Joffrion, Airbnb's communications director. She encourages hosts to buy their own traditional home liability insurance in addition to Airbnb's protection.

In addition to safety and security concerns, landlord-tenant laws can make short-term rentals difficult and, in some areas, potentially illegal. The New York Times reported in November that some hosts in the U.S. were facing fines in the tens of thousands of dollars for renting their homes through Airbnb.

"The laws vary from city to city, building to building, unit to unit," Airbnb's Joffrion says. (See box on previous page for D.C. laws.)

Despite these potential licensing hoops and the possibility of property damage or worse, the rewards of short-term renting far outweigh the risks to Torres. But if you want to try it, she says you need to be the right kind of person. "If people are very attached to their things, and they are going to be nosy and annoying to their guests, then I don't recommend that they do it," Torres says.

"You've got to love people, and you've got to appreciate things like sharing your home and sharing your things with people," she says. TRACY KRULIK (FOR EXPRESS)

Artists find ways to design, create and sell unique goods at home

Apartment Living

Virginia Arrisueño knows how to juggle work and life.

Arrisueño lives at 52 O Studios (52 O St. NW, 202-232-1063, 52streetstudios.org), one of Washington's oldest artist lofts. Built in 1914, the four-story brick building began its life as a warehouse just west of North Capitol Street. Today, it features rentable studios along with units that function as "live/work spaces."

Arrisueño, who produces an array of stylish knits for her company, DeNada (Denadadesign.com), started her career in one of the apartments with her husband, an artist who also works from home.

That means she, like other Washingtonians who make and sell art from home, has had to make her space serve double duty. Luckily for her, there are some fairly painless ways to turn your living space into your workspace.

When she first moved in, Arrisueño focused on keeping her apartment as organized as she possibly could. "I would pack up and put everything away to make sure we could live and function," she says.

The major challenge was finding room for her extra inventory and staff. It was tough enough to find a spot for her extra scarves, leg warmers and hats, so she and her husband have since rented out the workspace next-door. Arrisueño says it's a great compromise — she can measure her commute in feet, ideal for the 24/7 small-business life.

For those who aren't so lucky, she advises carving out an area in your home that's exclusive to your business.

"If you're working in a tight spot," she says, "figure out an area where you will do your everyday — answering emails, filling orders — keeping another space for where you keep your supplies."

It's a challenge Rachel Pfeffer knows well.

Pfeffer, 26, designs and creates funky jewelry, including rings shaped like bicycles, gold D.C. flag necklaces, and earrings in the shape of fish bones (with hearts for tails).

In Northwest D.C., the 14th Street Corridor may be the hottest spot for new apartments. Learn more in next week's Ready to Rent.

And she does it all from the living room of her one-bedroom apartment in Adams Morgan (though she spends occasional days at craft fairs or pop-up stores such as Ginger Root or Crafty Bastards).

This means that, more often than not, her supplies are strewn across her living room.

"I live in an apartment with my husband, and he's very forgiving," she says.

Pfeffer has learned some strategies for keeping things organized. For example, she has installed a bunch of shelves in her living room to store inventory and supplies.

She's also placed three small coffee tables in her living room, so she can move around easily. It's a strategy she learned when she Rachel Pfeffer has a dedicated workspace for jewelry design in her one-bedroom apartment in Adams Morgan, left. Rania Hassan says her mixed-media paintings, center, fill the basement of her three-bedroom home in Bloomingdale. Niall Cooper and Lindsey Morse are using their home kitchen as a test kitchen before they open a bakery.

New Laws Could Help Home Chefs

For many home chefs, the biggest obstacle to success isn't figuring out how to make 200 cupcakes in a galley kitchen. With a couple of exceptions, it is currently illegal to prepare food for commercial sale in a D.C. home kitchen. However, the D.C. Council is considering a measure that would allow bakers and others who make less than $25,000 a year to prepare food in their kitchen, as long as the food is properly labeled and follows safety regulations. Beer brewers and at-home vintners are already allowed to produce their goods in that way.

"The legislation offers people some good opportunities to get one foot on the ladder without taking too many risks," says Niall Cooper, who has been testing recipes at home and plans to open a brick-and-mortar bakery this spring.

Maryland has similar laws, but Virginia is less stringent. Check with your local health department to find out what the laws are in your area. A.E.

launched her business in Boston two years ago. "I try to keep them clean," she says. "But within an hour they get covered with boxes and tools and little pieces of metal."

And when all else fails, hide your mess away. "Invest in some nice storage containers," Pfeffer advises. "This will make it look pretty when you're trying to hide your mess."

Aspiring chefs have an even bigger challenge — they need to cram into whatever kitchen they've got.

Niall Cooper plans to open Bakehouse (Bakehousedc.com), a brick-and-mortar bakery at 1407 T St. NW, this spring. Cooper and his business partner (and wife), Lindsey Morse, spent years testing recipes in their kitchen, making small batches for friends to taste or to serve at private events. They also offered up their delicacies at farmers markets.

"We thought of our kitchen as a half-way house where you host or take part in a private event," he says.

Cooper says Morse is used to cooking in a professional kitchen. But adapting to the obstacles of home cooking hasn't posed too much of a challenge.

Still, no matter how organized you are, it can be hard to keep your home business from bleeding into most of the rooms of your house. Rania Hassan of GoshDarnKnits (Raniahassan.com) and her husband share the three-bedroom home they own in Bloomingdale. Both are artists, and Hassan

"Invest in some nice storage containers. This will make it look pretty when you're trying to hide your mess."

— RACHEL PFEFFER, WHO DESIGNS, CREATES AND SELLS JEWELRY OUT OF HER ADAMS MORGAN APARTMENT

says their work fills the basement where her husband puts the finishing touches on his gigantic clay and glass sculptures. One of the bedrooms is a painting studio. They even have a room full of bubble wrap and packing supplies. "The only room we don't ever do artwork in," she says, "is the kitchen." AMANDA ERICKSON (FOR EXPRESS)

Tax Tips for the Self-Employed

One of the biggest challenges for the self-employed is filling out tax forms. Are you missing important deductions or deducting too much?

Don't fret. Here are some tips from Kristie Arslan, CEO of the National Association for the Self-Employed:

► If you work from home, you can deduct some portion of the money you spend on your mortgage or rent, along with what you pay for electricity, heat and Internet service. Keep photocopies of these bills in a separate folder so they're accessible come tax time.

► The portion of home payments and bills you can deduct is proportionate to how much space your office takes up. So if you have a 100-square-foot home office in a 500-square-foot apartment, you can deduct 20 percent of your rent and expenses.

Next year, self-employed folks will be able to take a standard deduction.

► In order to deduct a portion of your home expenses, your workspace needs to be used exclusively by you for your work and you need to be using that space regularly.

► If possible, pay for business expenses separately from home expenses. This goes for big things, such as installing a separate Internet and phone line for your business, as well as small things, such as paying for separate sets of office supplies.

► By the 2013 tax season (the one you worry about in 2014), this is all going to get easier. The IRS is introducing a standard $1,500 deduction for the self-employed. AMANDA ERICKSON (FOR EXPRESS)

Mint Green, Spring Leather

Skin is now also in for hotter months. It's especially nice paired with ice-cream-dreamy mint. Vince gray leather motorcycle jacket and gray T-shirt ($995 and $78, Bloomingdale's); Modern Supply Clothiers mint-green chinos ($88, Bloomingdale's); earrings and necklace ($10 and $20, Violet Boutique); and Target bracelet ($20, Target stores). For store information, see page 18.

BRIGHT, BLACK OR WHITE

Dress cool for warmer weather with lacy shorts, neon shoes, tropical tops and other fresh fashions

Neon

Tame the shades of roadside signs and 1980s Madonna videos by pairing them with crisp white. Tibi peplum top ($350, Bloomingdale's); Hudson jeans ($165, Bloomingdale's); vegan "leather" clutch ($49, Violet Boutique); CC Skye bracelet ($315, Bishop Boutique); faux gem necklace ($24, Violet Boutique); and Kate Spade sunglasses ($138, The Shoe Hive).

STYLING Cathy Phillips-Starnes (For Express)

Neons. Warm-weather leather. Enough black and white to outfit a million Coco Chanel clones. So many trends are buzzing around this spring, a stylist could suffer whiplash. To avoid visits to the fashion emergency room, we suggest a prudent treatment: Dose your closet with a single new item at a time: tropical-print shoes, a lace top, maybe jeans in "it" color mint. "Yes, a few of these ideas can be mixed, say lace shorts with a bright print," says Julie Egermayer, owner of Adams Morgan's Violet Boutique. "But the easiest trend? Black and white. It's something we come around to again and again." Sort of like spring itself.

Lace

Formerly prim, lace gets racy when sewn onto short shorts. Black Sheep shorts ($68, South Moon Under); Timing striped top ($29, Willow); Melissa "Prism" wedges ($145, The Shoe Hive); and Alexis Bittar bangles ($155 each, The Shoe Hive).

spring fashion lookout

Tropical Prints

Are-we-in-Jamaica? patterns scream spring break—in a non-trashy-movie way. BB Dakota pants and tank ($78 and $78, South Moon Under); Remi & Reed belt ($42, South Moon Under); CC Skye cuff ($175, Bishop Boutique); long necklace ($16, Violet Boutique); and MICHAEL Michael Kors wooden “Josephine” wedges ($185, The Shoe Hive).

From Top:

Bangles ($14 each, Violet Boutique); Nanette Lepore blouse ($228, Bloomingdale's); Elaine Turner clutch ($75, Bishop Boutique); Jon Josef shoes ($140, The Shoe Hive); and J. Crew bag ($295, J. Crew).

Black and White

The classic noncolor on noncolor combo looks fresh in new shapes and styles. Tracy Reese silk pants ($249, Zoe Boutique); Maeve black tank ($68, Anthropologie); Waverly blazer ($264, Zoe Boutique); Alexis Bittar black and white rings ($35 each, The Shoe Hive); chandelier earrings ($12, Violet Boutique); Charming Charlie belt ($8, Charming Charlie stores); and L.K. Bennett “Sandy” strappy heels ($365, Bishop Boutique).

From Top:

Merona trench ($50, Target); Kate Spade necklace ($198, Piperlime); striped top ($69, South Moon Under); black shorts with white piping ($58, Bloomingdale's); and Liberty print scarf ($150, J. Crew).

'G.I. Joe: Retaliation' is a big mess of new and old that never quite comes together

Film Review

Franchise reboots are multiplying at an alarming rate. Take, for example, the 2009 "G.I. Joe: The Rise of Cobra," which was annihilated by critics but performed well at the box office. "G.I. Joe: Retaliation" is the reboot. Except it's not.

There's a new director, Jon M. Chu — the man behind a couple "Step Up" installments and the Justin Bieber documentary — and "Zombieland" writers Rhett Reese and Paul Wernick. But rather than wiping the slate clean, the filmmakers integrate seemingly random elements from the last film.

As the movie opens, Channing Tatum's character, Duke, leads his team to Pakistan on what turns out to be a suicide mission ordered by a fake president. But this villain underestimates the Joes, and a few survive, including the new de facto commander, Roadblock (Dwayne Johnson). Now the target of the U.S. government, the group has to go off the grid to investigate. All the nefarious threads lead to their arch-

Dwayne Johnson plays Roadblock, the de facto troop leader in "G.I. Joe: Retaliation," which is neither a sequel nor a total reboot.

Added Depth

G. I. Joe's second mission was scheduled to hit theaters last spring when Paramount suddenly delayed the film's release to convert the movie to 3-D. "It's like running a marathon ... then someone trips you and says, 'Oh, that's not the [finish] line,'" says director John M. Chu. (AP) enemy, Cobra Commander, who seeks total world domination. The heroes' scheming includes tracking down the original G.I. Joe, a curmudgeonly general played by Bruce Willis.

For all its absurdity, the movie takes itself awfully seriously. Yes, the goofy one-liners are there, but so are the earnest back stories about making it against all odds.

And while "G.I. Joe" is merely a movie based on toys, the action — the real point of all this — feels just as lifeless. With so many sequences computer-generated, the excitement bleeds right out of the fight scenes.

An Unexpected Father Figure

A sperm donor learns he has a brood of 533 in the genial 'Starbuck'

Film Review

Like his namesake, a legendary Holstein bull who is said to have sired some 200,000 calves, the title character of "Starbuck" also is a prodigiously fertile stud.

Thanks to an unscrupulous sperm bank, David Wozniak (aka yer for the children, 142 of whom have banded together to file a class action suit, demanding to know the identity of their biological father.

If you can't wait for the English-language version of this French-Canadian farce (due out later this year, and starring Vince Vaughn), Quebecois writer-director Ken Scott's original has charm to burn, thanks mainly to Huard, who brings a sweet affability and groundedness to what is admittedly a far-fetched tale. An Alien Concept

'The Host's' leading men say their movie is a world away from that other teen saga

Film

The movie poster for "The Host," opening Friday, features your typical teen-love-triangle image: Saoirse Ronan is front and center with a thousand-yard stare, while co-stars Jake Abel and Max Irons gaze at her longingly from opposite sides. It's not a surprising setup, considering the screenplay is based on a novel by Stephenie Meyer, author of the "Twilight" saga.

Even the actors know what you're thinking right now.

"The one thing we're trying to tell people," Abel says, "is that [the movie] is more than just that poster."

And Ronan's character is no Bella. Possessed by an alien parasite, she's got the body and internal voice of Melanie while simultaneously existing as Wanda, the alien who's taken up residence in Melanie's body. Irons plays Jared, Melanie's boyfriend; Abel plays Ian, who finds himself drawn to Wanda.

After Melanie/Wanda makes her way to Melanie's uncle's desert stronghold, Ian is the first to discover her, nearly dead from thirst. It's not exactly love at first sight.

"My first instinct is to kill her," Abel says. "That's the procedure [to follow in cases of alien possession]. So to get over that was something very interesting to explore: When and how does this enemy start to get under his skin?"

For Jared, the problems start after Melanie/Wanda is brought to the cave in the desert, where he greets the alien-in-his-ex's-body with a solid slap. "Which is a terrible thing to do, but how would you feel in that situation?" Irons says. "She's the constant reminder of what you've lost in your life."

Both actors, while grateful for the marketing power that comes with the "Twilight" connection, hope to keep a safe distance and avoid any Team Jared/Team Ian shenanigans. Fortunately, the characters in "The Host" are much deeper and more shaded than those in That Pale, Glittery Vampire Series in the Room; the acting is better, too. What really sets "The Host"

"My first instinct is to kill her. ... So to get over that was something very interesting to explore."

apart are the layers of conflict. Even the global battle between humans and invaders isn't black and white, as the aliens, who just need bodies to live, are a super-polite, peaceful race who turn Earth into a utopia — assuming you don't have a problem with the whole "bodily possession" element. Eventually, Ian and Jared turn on each other as they struggle with their feelings for Melanie and Wanda.

"I have my view, which is pretty unchangeable," Irons says to Abel, "and then you have your view, which is pretty unchangeable, and they're both right. It's wonderful to have problems like that to play with." KRISTEN PAGE-KIRBY (EXPRESS)

Triple the FX

FX is spinning off a new cable network aimed at young adults. Set to launch Sept. 2, FXX will join big brother FX along with the movie-oriented FXM. All three channels will share the same sensibility. FXX will be anchored by the comedies "It's Always Sunny in Philadelphia" (starring Charlie Day, below) and "The League." "All told, the three networks will air 25 original series in the next few years," says FX president John Landgraf. (AP)

The Anti-Bella

Oh, how I hate Bella Swan. The heroine of the "Twilight" saga offends me as a woman, as a feminist and, most importantly, as a "Buffy" fan. I could go on and on [and on and on] with specific reasons Bella makes me crazy, but essentially what bugs me is that Bella, throughout most of the series, is defined by what she is not: She's more NOT a vampire than she IS a human. What she is isn't enough when compared to Edward. She is what she lacks.

Saoirse Ronan, left, and Kristen Stewart may look alike but their Stephenie Meyer adaptations differ vastly.

The bitter aftertaste of "Twilight" loomed over me when I saw "The Host," adapted from a book written by "Twilight" author Stephenie Meyer. (Let's be honest here. I saw it only because I was going to be interviewing the two male leads, who are not exactly un-handsome.) And while "The Host" won't win any awards and didn't quite win my heart, I was pleasantly surprised by the strength of the main character.

Or characters. See, there's Melanie (Saoirse Ronan), a human who fights against parasitic alien invaders. And then there's Wanda (short for Wanderer), the parasitic alien invader that has taken over Melanie's body. Melanie's consciousness still hangs around, shouting inside Melanie/Wanda's head with an uneven Louisiana accent.

What's impressive about the two women is that, though they share a body, their strengths are entirely separate but equally valuable.

Melanie is bright and crafty and fiery; Wanda operates with a sense of inner peace and confidence (the aliens are not a violent force, but instead aim to eliminate conflict on Earth). And both women have a fully developed character arc; it's hard enough to find a film that features one woman with as many layers as Wanda and Melanie have.

Bella may be Meyer's most famous female creation, but Wanda and Melanie are twice as good.

Admission

(PG-13, 110 MINUTES) "Admission" is a cinematic underachiever: a movie with a good head on its shoulders but with an inconsistent report card. There's a high school senior with the same problem at the center of this off-kilter charmer — Jeremiah Balakian (Nat Wolff). Paul Rudd plays Jeremiah's principal, John Pressman, an earnest free spirit who's so determined to get his misfit star pupil into a good school that he calls up his old college classmate Portia Nathan (Tina Fey), a Princeton admissions officer he believes might be Jeremiah's mother. "Admission" is a serious film about life, relationships and growing up, with a gloss of humor. M.O.

The Call

(R, 95 MINUTES) This tense police procedural, starring Halle Berry as a besieged 911 operator, raises a provocative question: Can't someone come up with screenwriting software that signals when a script has made the fatal slip from hyped-up suspense to sheer ludicrousness? As a seasoned emergency responder named Jordan, Berry takes a call from a terrified teenager that does not end well. Rattled, she jumps into the breach when another young woman is abducted from a shopping mall parking lot. The twist in "The Call" is that Berry's character has no intention of allowing herself or her young charge to be a victim. A.H.

The Croods

(PG, 92 MINUTES) Think of this as the story of "The Flintstones," before that modern Stone Age family got, well, modern. Hunter-gatherers Grug Crood (voice of Nicolas Cage) and his wife, Ugga, don't live in an amenity-filled house but in a dark, depressing cave. Driving the story forward is the character of Eep, a restless teen. Sneaking out of the cave one night, Eep encounters Guy, a more advanced, Homo-sapiens-like adolescent who has discovered that the world as Eep knows it is coming to an end, thanks to shifting continental land masses. "The Croods" is light fare, but it explores a serious theme: the importance of cooperation in the formation of human society. M.O.

Identity Thief

(R, 111 MINUTES) What a bummer. "Identity Thief" turns out to be instantly forgettable: a desultory collection of slapstick gags, buddy-movie clichés and chase-sequence bombast. Sandy Patterson (Jason Bateman) receives a call from a cheerful financial security operator who persuades him to give her his Social Security number. Within a few hours, this unrepentantly amoral con artist (Melissa McCarthy) is on her way to racking up $12,000 in credit card debt, all in Sandy's name. The real Sandy eventually sets off to Florida to find the fake Sandy, a junket that turns into a "Midnight Run"-type chase. A.H.

The Incredible Burt Wonderstone

(PG-13, 101 MINUTES) "The Incredible Burt Wonderstone" is a generic, fitfully funny mainstream comedy that doesn't nearly get the best from its name-brand players but doesn't qualify as a desecration, either. Viewers expecting the chemistry that made "The 40-Year-Old Virgin" and "Anchorman" big hits will need to adjust their assumptions: Here, Steve Carell's sidekick is played by Steve Buscemi, who has his own bugged appeal but is essentially a straight man to Carell's diva. When Jim Carrey shows up on the Vegas Strip as hipster stunt artist Steve Gray, any hopes of comic riffing between him and Carell are soon dashed by the realization that Carrey barely registers his co-stars' presence. A.H.

Jack the Giant Slayer

(PG-13, 117 MINUTES) Much like the imaginary setting — a floating land called Gantua, situated halfway between heaven and Earth and populated by a race of CGI giants — the fairy tale-inspired film is stuck between two extremes: too scary for very young children, yet too silly for older fans. Loosely based on the English folk tale about a boy (Nicholas Hoult) who discovers a magic beanstalk that leads to the realm of an evil giant, the film includes scenes of pitched battle that resemble outtakes of the "Lord of the Rings" films, as well as the kind of belching-and-flatulence humor popular with preschoolers. The question seems obvious: Who exactly is this movie for? M.O.

Olympus Has Fallen

(R, 118 MINUTES) In "Olympus Has Fallen," an efficient if unimaginative version of "Die Hard" in the White House, Gerard Butler plays Mike Banning, a Secret Service agent whose close relationship with President Benjamin Asher and his son, Connor, is destroyed after a rescue mission goes awry. South Korean prime minister ends with Asher, the vice president and the secretary of defense being abducted and held hostage in the White House bunker. Director Antoine Fuqua stages the takeover of 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. and its environs with unsettling, visceral mayhem. Spring is barely here, and America already has its first summer blockbuster. A.H.

Oz the Great and Powerful

(PG, 130 MINUTES) Oscar Diggs (James Franco) is a sideshow conjurer with a traveling circus in 1905 Kansas. He's forced to make a quick escape from the midway via hot-air balloon, at which point he's caught in a cyclone that plops him down in a brightly colored, wide-screen world. If that all sounds familiar, it's meant to: "Oz the Great and Powerful" hews faithfully to Victor Fleming's "The Wizard of Oz." Time travel may be one element of the L. Frank Baum stories on which "The Wizard of Oz" and this incarnation are based, but plopping a Gen-X California boy into a role that calls for swift instincts and shrewd alertness is an error from which "Oz" never recovers. A.H.

Safe Haven

(PG-13, 115 MINUTES) Hoping to rebottle the lightning captured in "The Notebook" and "Dear John," romance packager Nicholas Sparks has given his usual formula some sharp edges. The film opens like a gritty thriller, complete with a taut chase through a crowded bus station and a few smidgens of blood. Soon enough, the film's protagonist, Katie, has fetched up in a quaint North Carolina town, where Sparks' fantasy of self-reinvention takes place. The film is like one of those Valentine's Day confections that satisfy your sweet tooth until you get to the weird, off-putting center. A.H.

Snitch

(PG-13, 95 MINUTES) "Snitch" is not your typical Dwayne Johnson movie. Neither a family-friendly comedy nor a flat-out action flick, "Snitch" requires little of its star other than a look of perpetual consternation. Johnson plays John Matthews, a man who volunteers to go undercover for the DEA in order to get the criminal sentence reduced for his 20-year-old son. John starts to suspect that he's disposable and that if he doesn't watch out he's going to end up stuffed inside a metal drum filled with acid in Mexico. Johnson does everything in his power to seem like the clueless family man who's never picked up a gun before. Other than that little role reversal, however, there's little that we haven't seen before. M.O.

PHIL CARUSO

Spring Breakers

(R, 92 MINUTES) What little fascination there is in "Spring Breakers," Harmony Korine's tedious exercise in crime drama, comes courtesy of James Franco, who plays a corn-rowed, dental-grill-wearing drug dealer named Alien. It's a 15-minute script padded out to 92 minutes with scenes of degrading "Girls Gone Wild"-style toplessness, underage drinking and drug use, and culminating in an absurd, slow-motion shootout featuring bikini-clad gunmen in pink ski masks. How on earth is it possible for one film to be so tiresome? M.O.

An Epic to Embrace

Season 3 is the right time to jump in to 'Game of Thrones'

Fantasy

SUN 9:00 Dragons. They grow up so fast.

"Game of Thrones," HBO's gorgeously realized adaptation of George R.R. Martin's bestselling pseudo-medieval fantasy novels, marches into its third season on Sunday. Flying lizards thrive where good men have lost their heads.

At this point, you either know a Targaryen from a Lannister, don't care to, or are intrigued but intimidated by a narrative as impenetrable as chain mail.

For the curious, now might be the time to take the plunge.

As the show picks up where last season left off, a lone, fur-clad soldier is running across a barren, snowy landscape. Silhouetted figures approach not from shadows but the white-out conditions of the oncoming winter.

That sort of imagery, expansive and cinematic, is a "Thrones" hallmark. It stays with us through long, chilly stretches of dense exposition. The denizens of Westeros are a chatty bunch.

Fortunately, they're also a well-constructed lot.

There's no better example than Peter Dinklage's dwarf Tyrion Lannister, the high-born rascal made cynical by circumstance. He's Falstaff and Richard III in one package.

Not to be outdone by "Downton Abbey" in the diva department, "Thrones" recruits Dame Diana Rigg as Olenna Tyrell, a ruthless matriarch whose beloved granddaughter is betrothed to the sadistic boy-tyrant Joffrey (Jack Gleeson). Joffrey just might have met his match.

BEST BETS

FRI 9:00

American Masters — Philip Roth: Unmasked

(PBS) In candid interviews, author Philip Roth, left, discusses intimate aspects of his life and art: his distinctly unliterary upbringing, his writing process, his first marriage and the inspiration behind his most famous novels.

SAT 10:00

Rebel Eats

(FOOD) Fresh off his "Food Network Star" victory, Justin Warner is hitting the road in search of America's most daring culinary rebels. With just $300 to gas up his beloved beater of a car, Justin travels the South, tasting such oddities as bacon beer and jellyfish salad.

SUN 8:00

Call the Midwife

(PBS) In the season premiere, the community celebrates the birthday of Nurse Lee (Jessica Raine, right, with Bryony Hannah and Helen George), but she's too concerned about a new patient.

SUN 10:00

Vikings

(HIST) After a seer tells him that Ragnar Lothrok (Travis Fimmel) is out to kill him, Earl Haraldson (Gabriel Byrne) burns Ragnar's home and farm. Ragnar, injured and in hiding, must choose a path back to freedom. (TRIBUNE MEDIA)

Series Premiere

Ahead of His Time

Jeremy Piven, above, stars as the upstart American who taught the English how to shop in the "Masterpiece Classic" series "Mr. Selfridge" (Sun., 9 p.m., PBS), a true-life period drama from writer Andrew Davies. Piven plays Harry Gordon Selfridge, father of the renowned London department store bearing his name, which opened to astonishment and some disdain in 1909. (TM)

HOROSCOPE

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Don't be fooled by the seemingly easy pace today; there is much to be done, and much of it has taken on increased importance right now.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You may find that you are unable to do precisely what you have said you will do today — but it's not entirely your fault. The odds are long.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You could give yourself a little more support, rather than depending on others for the kind of lift you require at this time.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You may be wracking your brain trying to remember names and faces — but you'll receive a timely reminder when things get dicey.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Progress is likely to pick up throughout the day, as your efficiency and productivity increase. You may have to answer to an authority figure.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) The answers to tricky questions may take you by surprise. In turn, what you do with the info will surprise your critics.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) You are likely to receive assistance from a friend or loved one at the moment in which you need it most.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) You must resist the temptation to return to the scene of the crime. In fact, you'll want to be as far away as possible!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) You'll receive instruction from someone who knows much more than you do about a certain topic. Listen up!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You may not see things progressing according to plan. Subtle changes in your approach can rectify the situation.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Someone who does things very differently from you will have more to say today — and your reaction will be seen as most significant.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) You'll fall into something quite creative almost by accident — but you can surely make the most of this situation's potential.

Fill in each column, row and 3x3 box with the digits 1 through 9 without repeating any. The twist in Samurai Sudoku is that the digits that appear in the overlapping boxes must work for both puzzles. A piece of advice to get you started: Don't focus on completing one grid at a time. Keep the whole puzzle in mind as you go, because filling in a number in one grid could give you clues to another.
